What is it?

- an open and shared collection of speeches that ensures the quality and variety of materials for teaching interpreting

- an easy-to-use tool to practise interpretation: SCICrec

Pedagogical use

- materials for interpretation exercises or other types of exercises during training sessions
- materials for homework following trainers' instructions/SCICrec
- materials for self-training/SCICrec (recommended for the last phases of the training process)

European Commission

Contents

- speeches from real working conditions: parliamentary debates, conferences, press conferences, hearings, interviews, etc.

- speeches suited to the different phases of the learning process made by experienced interpreters and trainers

Survey

833 replies

- 24.4% professional interpreters
- 55.1% students and recent graduates
- 20.6% teachers

Conclusions (1)

- teachers and students are satisfied overall
- interpreters have needs and expectations that are difficult to reconcile with the other 2 categories
- "more of"
- discrepancy between supply (available languages) and demand for some languages

Conclusions (2)

- availability of transcriptions could be increased
- more accurate grading
- user experience to be improved: lay-out, navigability, search (content, level, …), etc.
- proprietary application (SCICrec) remains unknown to the SR-users, difficult to install and use
